Leonardo Da Vinci Walter Isaacson

Leonardo DaVinci created some of the most famous paintings in history. But he was just as much a scientist and an engineer as he was an artist. With a passion that sometimes became obsessive, he studied anatomy, fossils, birds, the heart, flying machines, botany, geology, and weaponry. His ability to stand at the crossroads of the humanities and the sciences made him history's most creative genius. His combination of science, art, technology, and imagination remains an enduring recipe for creativity. So, too, was his ease at being a bit of a misfit: heretical, illegitimate, gay, vegetarian and left-handed. His relentless curiosity should remind us of the importance of instilling, both in ourselves and our children, not just knowledge but a willingness to question it.
